Government Institute Proposed

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep.

Peter H. B. Frelinghuysen, R-N.J., said today that by transferring the financing of non-governmental activities from the Central Intelligence Agency to a proposed Institute of International Affairs, some private donations might be attracted to reduce tax-borne costs of the service.

A bill proposing such a transfer of funding activities was introduced last week with Frelinghuysen among its sponsors.

The bill provides for an institute to be run by a nine-member board of directors appointed by the President. The majority of the directors would be from private life.

"It is my hope," said Frelinghuysen, "that Congress will allocate funds at the same level as that appropriated for the CIA to carry on this program.

"I do not anticipate any increase in federal expenditures to support this program since the resources currently spent through the CIA would be disbursed through the institute.

"Since the institute would be empowered to accept private gifts and contracts, the level of federal expenditures might be reduced."
